It is estimated that the U.S. spends about $2.3 trillion a year on new-product, IT/IS, construction, and process improvement projects, and many (most in some categories) fail in significant respects. The cost of failure in dollars, careers and even the viability of sponsoring organizations themselves are very high. Using proven project management methodologies, and well-practiced program/project experience, Sippel Glidden ensures that the contributors to project failure are anticipated, and mitigated aggressively.

Our Project Management support services pay for themselves by:

- Improving target project implementation performance in terms of cost, time, and end-result quality
 - Establishing ongoing (future) project manager, staff, process, and tools capabilities and confidence
 - Using SG's transitional, supplemental leadership and staffing support versus permanent employee payroll
 - Salvaging projects that may be expensively 'stuck' or approaching cancellation
 - Educating the organization (by training and example) on the value of PM rigor and practice

Business initiatives can fail for many reasons - few of them are unforeseeable, and most are avoidable!
